Subject: An Essay on Microsoft

Microsoft is a virus. It is the 'caulerpa taxifolia' of the sea of software, transforming a vibrant diversity into a mediocre sameness. It has no predators, and its hosts have no resistance. It has infected over 95% of the silicon-based life on the planet. The antibodies have mutated, and become totally ineffective. The thousands of macro viruses, Melissa, iloveyou, and the tens of thousands of other viruses are merely secondary infections.
